

Data protection fee self assessment

Start again

1. What are you trying to find out?

If I need to pay the data protection fee and how much I need to pay

Change this answer

2. Is your organisation a public authority?

No

Change this answer

3. Are you currently trading, carrying out activity or receiving income?

Currently trading

Change this answer

4. Are you a not-for-profit organisation that qualifies for an exemption?

No

Change this answer

5. Are you using personal information?

Yes

Change this answer

6. Are you using personal information electronically?

Yes

Change this answer

7. Do you make any decisions about how personal information is used?

No

Change this answer

8. Do you use any form of CCTV?

No

Change this answer

9. Have you received a letter or email from us?

I haven't had a letter or email from the ICO

Change this answer

You don't need to pay a fee

Based on your answers, you don't have to pay a fee to the ICO.

Do I need to tell the ICO I am exempt?

No. You do not need to tell us you're exempt.

Your data protection obligations

Even though you are exempt from paying a fee, you still need to comply with your other data protection obligations. You can find advice to help you with this on our website here: Advice for small organisations.

Should I pay the fee even though I am exempt?

We do not expect you to pay if you are exempt, but some organisations choose to register and pay a fee despite being exempt so they can be listed on our register of data protection fee payers.

Tell us your thoughts

We've recently made changes to the self assessment. If you'd like to give feedback on your experience, please take five minutes to complete this survey [opens in new tab].

Exit self assessment →